

Dana: The Practice of Generosity at Mountain Stream Meditation Retreats

Frequently Asked Questions

What is dana?

Dana (pronounced "daa-nuh") is a Pāli word meaning giving. Dana is the first perfection of the heart (pāramī), and the foundation of Buddhist practice, based in the understanding that giving opens the heart, creates connection to others, and teaches letting go. Dana in the form of monetary gifts supports our teachers and staff and is most often the only form of compensation given to teachers for teaching retreats.

Is dana a tip for service provided?

No. Dana is a form of practice and part of how our community supports retreat teachers and retreat staff. We encourage practitioners to see beyond the transactional view that we encounter all around us and instead tap into the generosity in our hearts. Dana is "paying it forward," stepping into the cycle of generosity that honors the Dharma ancestors who came before us, expresses gratitude, and supports those who come after us.

Is dana tax deductible?

Yes. Dana is set up to be fully tax-deductible.

How does dana for teachers work?

100% of your teacher dana offering goes to the teacher of the retreat. Mountain Stream does this to ensure the tax-deductibility of these gifts. Mountain Stream does not take any fees or administrative portion. Teachers are independent and not employees of Mountain Stream.

For retreat teachers, is dana their only source of income?

It depends on each individual. For some teachers, dana is their sole source of support, while others receive income in a variety of ways outside of their teaching at Mountain Stream.

Do retreat staff receive dana?

Yes. Retreat staff (cook & manager) are reliant upon the generosity of the communities they serve, and gratefully accept dana to support their livelihood. Please consider offering a gift to them at the end of your retreat.

How much dana should I offer?

As you are moved by the teachings and your experience, and understand your own financial capacity, please choose a level of giving that is best for you. The teachings of the Buddha have lasted 2,600 years in part because of the generosity of individuals, families, and communities across the world.

What do my registration fees pay for?

Registration fees pay for the rental of the retreat venue, the cost of food for our meals, and support Mountain Stream's administrative costs to organize retreats.

What are ways of giving?
